

He Kept His Promise

(Original.)
Between the death of King Edward VI. of England and the accession of Queen Mary there was an effort made to place a usurper on the throne in the person of Lady Jane Grey. The failure of the plan brought on one of the most affecting tragedies of English history.

With others sent to the Tower of London for complicity in the movement was Henry Hamerston, who was to have been married to Harriet Burleigh, a young lady of rare accomplishments and beauty. She had pleaded with her lover to keep aloof from the conspirators, but the dangers attending the attempt were as alluring to him as they were repellent to her. He had gone heart and soul into the effort, fought valiantly for the cause and when it fell was made a prisoner to await trial and probable execution.

Hamerston, being a man of rank and not having been a leader in the attempted usurpation, was accorded privileges usually granted to such persons. He was lodged with one of the Tower officials and permitted to have his own servant and such luxuries as he desired. His devil-may-care disposition kept him up even in the shadow of the block, and when his fiancée came to see him it was he who supported her sinking spirits instead of her doing as much for him. "Never fear, sweetheart," he would say cheerily; "this head will never roll into the basket. My wit will surely get me out of this scrape. You may see me any moment. Keep the fastest horse in your father's stable saddled. Some day I will mount him and before they can catch me will gain the coast, and away to France." The girl considered this merely intended to keep up a show of spirit that she might not break down before the tragedy came.

Hamerston was such agreeable company that his keeper never tired of being with him. He would frequently ask his prisoner to drink a bottle of wine with him. One day when they sat down to drink Hamerston made a wry face at the taste of the wine.

"Root, man!" exclaimed the keeper. "What d'ye mean by making a face at wine I have myself imported from Burgundy?"

"I don't like it," replied Hamerston. "I have much better wine in the cellar myself."

"Nonsense! There's no better wine in France than this."

"But I don't like French wines. Give me your permission to send to the cellar for some wine I have there, and I'll show you what good wine is."

"Send it you like."

Hamerston's servant was called, and his master, looking him in the eye meaningly, said:

"Go to the cellar and fetch a bottle of Oporto wine. Do not make a mistake and bring any of the other wines I have there. Bring the Oporto."

Now, this was a signal between master and servant that no one recognized except themselves. The servant went away, and the two men continued to discuss the merits of different wines, the keeper standing sturdily by those of France, his prisoner advocating those of Spain. Time passed, and the servant did not return.

"The man has stopped to drink," said Hamerston, "and likely is lying on the floor drunk. I'll go to the cellar myself."

Jumping up, he left the room. In the corridor his servant was waiting for him.

"All right," said the man. "Here is the key."

"And the keeper's man?"

"I persuaded him to go to the cellar for the wine, followed him and locked him in."

Hamerston quickly inserted the key handed him in the door of the room where he had left his keeper and, turning it, locked the official in. Then, changing his velvet doublet and hat for the coarser one of his servant that he might attract less attention, he walked away with no one to stop him. Keeping as far away from those pass-

A FIRM BELIEVER IN CUTICURA REMEDIES

"I enlisted in the Corps of Engineers as a telegraph operator, and, while stationed in the Philippines, I became subject to the 'Dobbie Itch,' as the natives call it. This disease small, white, itching pimples form under the skin, generally between the toes, on the limbs, between the fingers, and under the arms. I never knew of a case originating outside the Philippine Islands, but have known of many cases where it has returned in this country and invariably at the same time of the year as the original attack. The cause, so far as I could learn, was some tropical parasite or germ peculiar to that region. "I got so bad that I was confined to my quarters a week at a time. The Army Surgeons applied some carbolic solution, and it would disappear for a time when it would break out again. I was discharged from the Engineers by reason of disability contracted in line of duty, and when I had the trouble again, my druggist, Mr. Z., of Brooklyn, recommended Cuticura Remedies. The immediate relief was manifest with my first purchase, and the malady quickly yielded to the Remedies. It has never recurred or bothered me since I began to use and continued to use the Cuticura Remedies. You may quote me as a believer in Cuticura Remedies from personal experience. John S. Woods, 221 Sands St., Brooklyn, N. Y., Oct. 21 and 26, 1906."

ing as possible, he walked leisurely to the main gate of the town and passed out, the guard never dreaming that he was a prisoner of state.

Harriet Burleigh was sitting in her room, attempting to embroider to divert her mind from the tragedy that hung over her. She was dreading that her lover might any moment be brought to trial, and as there was no defense he must surely be convicted of high treason. She was thinking that she would in that event go and implore the queen to spare his life. Suddenly her maid called to her from the window:

"Lawk, my lady! Is this a ghost walking up from the gate?"

Harriet ran to the window and at once recognized Henry Hamerston in the apparel of a servant. He was walking leisurely, with seeming unconcern. Catching her breath, she ran down the staircase and met her lover.

"I told you I'd come, sweetheart. Have you the horse ready?"

The girl flung herself into his arms for a moment, then led him to the stable, where she showed him a saddled horse. Mounting, he stooped for a parting kiss and rode away as leisurely as he had come. But no sooner had he fallen than he put spurs to his horse and dashed away for the eastern coast. There he found a vessel bound for France and shipped as a common sailor, arriving within a few hours.

When the effects of the rebellion had quieted down, Harriet Burleigh asked and received for her lover a pardon. He returned to England, the lovers were married, and Hamerston remained a loyal subject.

GOV. GUILD DISOBEYED

Did Not Answer Summons to Court

IN INJUNCTION CASE

Said He Would Go to Court, However, If the Judge Thought It Necessary—The Case Goes on Without Him.

Boston, Jan. 15.—Governor Guild did not go to court yesterday in response to the summons served upon him in the case of Dr. F. A. Harris against the Boston American. The court, however, was informed that although a press of office business made it difficult for the governor to attend, he would willingly do so if the court deemed it necessary. However, the governor added that if the court thought it might be necessary for him to be present he would first like to have the court hear Attorney General Malone on the matter. Judge Gasgill, who presided at the hearing, did not call upon the attorney general to appear before him. The hearing was on the question of granting an injunction against the American, preventing it from printing more of Dr. Harris' now famous document, entitled "The Massachusetts Dreyfus Case," and it was brief, only two witnesses, Senator James H. Vahney and the plaintiff, former Medical Examiner Harris, testifying.

The equity session of the superior court was crowded by attorneys and persons familiar with the famous Tucker murder case when the action was begun. Hon. Jesse M. Gove, appeared for Dr. Harris and Julius T. Auerbach represented the paper.

Senator Vahney, who was the senior counsel for Charles L. Tucker, stated that he received the now famous document from Dr. Harris on May 14, 1906, being brought to him by his brother, who secured it from the doctor at the latter's office.

The senator said he had three copies of the original made and about a dozen expurgated copies. He told of an interview that he had with Dr. Harris when the document was discussed. Senator Vahney said that he told the doctor that he did not want it published in the newspapers until after it had been given to the governor and that Dr. Harris told him to do as he thought best.

The court took the papers in the case and said he would take the matter under advisement.

DROVE OUT FAMILY THEN SHOT HIMSELF

Patrick Flaherty of Woburn, Mass. Was Sitting in a Chair and Bleeding From Hole in Right Temple.

Boston, Jan. 15.—Driving his family from their home yesterday at the point of a revolver, and locking them out in the snow storm, Patrick Flaherty of Salem street, Woburn, then went to the bedroom; seated himself in a chair and ended his own life by a bullet in the temple.

Flaherty, who was an expert stone mason, has been acting strangely of late, and it is said by the police that he had several times threatened to injure his family. When he arose yesterday morning he was in a violent temper, and before breakfast decided to clean out the house. With a revolver he drove his wife and children into the snow and returning, barricaded the door and went to an upper room.

Pedestrians who passed the house say they saw Flaherty, after entering the house, pacing about the chamber and glaring from the windows.

Patrolman John Walsh was notified,

WRECK INQUIRY RESUMED.

Detrow Testifies Before the Commerce Commission.

Washington, Jan. 15.—The investigation into the causes of the fatal wreck on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad at Terra Cotta, D. C., on the night of December 31, was resumed yesterday by the interstate commerce commission. The commission after beginning an investigation postponed the hearings until after the coroner's jury had returned its verdict. One of the witnesses who appeared yesterday was William M. Detrow, the operator at the block station at Silver Spring, Md., who was held directly responsible for the wreck by the coroner's jury, and who is now out on bond to await the action of the federal grand jury. Detrow caused considerable surprise when he testified that

"How do you account for the fact that the train crews of 2120 and No. 66 testified that they saw the double green at your station on the night of the wreck?" asked Mr. Walters, the interstate commerce commission's attorney. "They want to put the responsibility off on me," Detrow replied.
